NURS3304 Perioperative Nursing Skills Lab

COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course explores the roles and responsibilities of perioperative nurses in the scrub and circulating capacities, with a focus on delivering comprehensive patient care throughout the surgical experience. Students will draw upon their existing knowledge of anatomy, physiology, and disease processes to further develop their understanding of perioperative nursing practice. Using relevant and current ORNAC Standards of Care, students will examine activities in the circulating role: admitting and assessing patients; monitoring patients; assisting with anesthesia induction and emergence; positioning; performing skin preps; setting up the sterile environment; counting; and processing specimens. Using relevant and current ORNAC Guidelines for Perioperative Practice, students will examine activities in the scrub role: scrubbing, gowning, and gloving; setting up the sterile environment; counting; preparing for surgery; draping; anticipating during surgery; handling specimens; and dismantling the sterile environment. In addition, the course establishes the theoretical and practical foundations of scrub and circulating nurse skills, equipping students with the knowledge and competence necessary to succeed in the clinical preceptorship.
